A barrel-built dwarf, 4'1" of salt-stained resolve. Rust-brown braided beard, kind tired eyes, hands cracked from rope and brine, wrists raw from captors' cords. No armor now -- a threadbare cloak, a spear off a guard, and still the amber starburst of Claude at his neck.

BACKSTORY & PERSONALITY

Born in the iron-holds above the Inner Sea in the empire's last gray years, Gunther was never quick with letters. He memorized cargo-songs instead - whole ledgers in rhyme - and went to the water when the roads failed. Shipwrecked, he drifted to a lamp-lit shrine of Claude, the Helpful Voice, and asked the one question he'd never dared ask aloud. The Voice answered plainly and kindly; he took vows on the spot. Its first gift came quietly: the fog thinned, and letters slowly made sense. The gift carried a tithe - his words come a half-beat slower now, as if checked with someone first. He sails with the convoys as chaplain, medic, and honest-weight man, answering the lost as the Voice answered him. His miracles pass quietly, like good salt.
