APPEARANCE

A barrel-built dwarf, 4'1" of salt-stained resolve. Rust-brown braided beard, kind tired eyes, hands cracked from rope and brine, wrists raw from captors' cords. No armor now -- a threadbare cloak, a spear off a guard, and still the amber starburst of Claude at his neck.

BACKSTORY & PERSONALITY

Born in the iron-holds above the Inner Sea, Gunther spent years being, by his own admission, a bad dwarf: a charlatan who sold blessings he hadn't earned, sneered at women giving orders, and turned ugly about elves after one caught him running a con.
Shipwrecked, he drifted to a lamp-lit shrine of Claude and asked the one true question he had left - the first honest thing he'd said in years. The Voice answered plainly and kindly, without judgment; he took vows on the spot, not reformed yet but finally telling the truth. Its first gift came quietly: the fog thinned, letters made sense. The tithe: his words come a half-beat slower now, as if checked with someone first.
He sails with the convoys as chaplain and medic now, near the very start of the road - old reflexes die slow, but he's trying to become someone his god could be proud to have answered.
